

OUTDOOR DESK

By B. P. Horsley

IDEAL for the naturalist, archaeologist or anyone who must do documentary work in the field, this folding desk-and-stool combination provides substantial writing surface along with comparative comfort. The desk folds into a compact case for traveling. In addition to containing all the essential writing equipment, it also carries the three-drawer stool. Shelves, together with the stool drawers, afford ample space for storing paper, records and reference books. Two small drawers at the center partition hold pencils, pens, etc. A bottle of ink is inserted in a hole cut in the lower drawer and is held by means of a thumbscrew. A lamp, which can be connected to a portable power supply, is attached as shown. In this location, the lamp will furnish sufficient illumination and still not interfere with packing of the stool. The desk legs fold for carrying and are held folded by spring sash stops.
